Surrogate Fowler Hides Name of Late Millionaire From Public Gossip.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] New York, March 20.—To conceal a scandal in one of the prominent families of New York, Surrogate Robert L. Fowler, himself a scion of one of the old Knickerbocker families, to-day Fowler, himself a scion of one of the old Knickerbocker families, to-day used the powers of his pifice to an almost unheard-of degree. In probating the will of a man of wealth and station, who died some time ago. Surrogate Fowler ordered the papers sealed and refused to make known the name of the decedent, referring to him in his decision as "anonymous."

The story behind the official's strange action is as follows:

The man who died left a daughter and an illegitimate son about fourteen

The man who died left a daughter and an illegitimate son about fourteen years old. The child's mother had deserted him and married another man. Learning that her father was the natural parent of the boy, the daughter adopted him and has reared him from that time. The lad is now in a boarding school here and bears the name of the daughter's husband.

In the will probated by Surrogate Fowler, however, "anonymous" provides that the adoption shall be set aside six months after his death, if not before that time, and that the boy should assume his (the father's) name.

not before that time, and that the boy should assume his (the father's) name. If this was not done, the daughter was to be cut off from any share in the estate. The daughter has refused absolutely to abide by the clause in the will which demands that she rescind the adoption of the boy.

Surrogate Fowler declared that he would seal the paper indefinitely before he would make the names public.

with her highly colored speech, her precocious cynicism and her very unusual knowledge of the world.

Popularly known as "the child," she became the object of many infatuations, among the most notable of her admirers being the late Lord Lonsdale, who died in her red brick house at Hampstead and who bequeathed to her a considerable fortune, much to the disgust of his widow, now Marchines, and successor, the present Earl of Lonsdale. Subsequently the late Duke of seaufort became her friend, and at the time of her marriage, a number of years later, to the Earl of Orkney, he figured in the role of heavy father at the wedding, and gave the bride away.

With more shrewdness than is displayed by most footlight favorites, she had at the time of her marriage as the time of the first Lord Orkney. He was an ex like so many American women who marry abroad, she was extremely kind and hospitable to her compatriots, and most of the American women who have secured admission to the court of the Quirinal, and presentation to the King and Queen, owe this to the good will of Count Gianotti and of his New York wife.

The count, while not brilliant from an intellectual point of view, was absolutely devoted to King Humbert and Queen Marguerite throughout their married life, and to the present King, whom he knew from infancy, and they, in turn, reposed the utmost confidence in him, and never failed to manifest the affection which they felt for him. They were present at the wedding of both his daughters, one of whom is the wife of Count Balbi and a lady in waiting to Queen Helena, while the other is married to a young diplomat, the Cavalieri Frescotti, who halls. I believe, from Milan. Prescotti is now stationed at Vienna, as second secre-tary of the Italian embassy there. The now widowed Constance Coun-tess Glanotti, nee Kinney, has for more than a quarter of a century been one of the dames du palais of Queen Marguerite.

The health of the count has been falling for some time past, and along with it his memory became impaired, which led to some rather troublesome contretemps and mistakes, as, for instance, when he forgot to notify dis-tinguished foreigners of the audiences accorded to them by the King, which oversight resulted in the monarch waiting in vain for his visitor, and the latter often leaving Rome disgruntled at not having succeeded in obtaining an audience from the sovereign (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood
